

A SPECIAL QUOTE FROM A RECENT HOMILY

Several people have asked me for a copy of the quote I used in a Sunday homily a few weeks ago, from Gerald May. Here it is:

Seeing God as parent may seem childish. But might there be, in the unadmitted sparkle of the child within you, a sometime longing to climb into God's fatherly lap, to nestle against God's motherly breast, to rest for a moment in the shadow of God's wings or be held in God's strong and tender arms? If you could allow yourself to feel it, are there not times when you would love to cry on God's shoulder, to let God tell you you are worthwhile and beautiful? And is there not something in you that would be delighted if you could bring a smile to God's face?

--Gerald May, The Awakened Heart