

Planned Parenthood

The AP item in the 8-28 Press-Register about Planned Parenthood's blocking a Missouri law regulating abortion clinics is illuminating. The law, the item states, would require abortion clinics to meet "state building, staffing and health standards." PP objects that this would have the effect of "dramatically reducing" the number of abortions clinics.

This is very interesting. Now we have PP itself admitting that they are not supplying health care since they believe they cannot meet state health standards in many of their clinics. Surely one must ask what the conditions are in those clinics, and what health risks abortion providers offer the desperate women who turn to them? We already know the health risks they pose to the unborn babies...